

ABSTRACT

Individual transactions may be provided through a dedicated line from a global destination system (GDS). The transactions may related to airline flights, and costs, between an originating location and a destination. These transactions may be displayed on a first one of dual screen monitors. The individual transactions may also be provided through the internet from non-legacy airlines and on special fares from the legacy airlines. These individual transactions may be displayed on the other one of the dual screen monitors simultaneously with the display on the first one of the screen monitor. The traveler may select one of the individual transactions simultaneously displayed on the dual screen monitors.
